PREFACE.

THE public being ever the acknowledged judge of literary productions, it is but just that it should be furnished with the requisite information concerning the special utility claimed for a work in a department of letters already occupied; but this obligation brings with it the disagreeable task of detailing the improvements claimed to have been made, and of exposing to view the deficiencies and errors that have been supplied or corrected,—a task rendered still more painful to a sensitive mind, inasmuch as it involves the necessity of seeming to exalt one's self at the expense of one's predecessors in the same career, and of endeavoring at the same time to diminish their merits and expose their faults.

The Editor is anxious to disavow motives so mean and dishonorable, especially when convinced, as he is by experience, of the difficulties attending every step in the labors of a lexicographer—labors in which the highest excellence can be considered only as an approximation to that standard of perfection which dwells in the mind of an author. So far from wishing to detract in the least from the works of his predecessors, the Editor is willing frankly to confess, that without their labors he should never, perhaps, have undertaken the task of the present publication; and he considers it but just to say to them, in the words of the Spanish fabulist Iriarte—

"Gracias al que nos trajo las gallinas."—FAB. xii.

There are undoubtedly faults in the Spanish and English Dictionaries that have preceded the present work, but it is also true that they embody many excellencies: theEditor has endeavored to avail himself of the latter, while at the same time he has carefully corrected the former.

A Bilingual Dictionary is undoubtedly the surest means of obtaining a knowledge of a foreign tongue; but, to secure this end, it should contain a copious vocabulary, not only of words generally admitted, but also of those not found in common dictionaries which are in use among the polite and well educated. Language, like dress, is subject to continual change; and many phrases which were deemed elegant two centuries ago are almost unintelligible at the present day, in consequence of being displaced by others which were then unknown. In speaking we naturally desire to be understood; we ought therefore to learn and make use of those signs which put us in possession of one of the greatest gifts of our beneficent Creator, namely, the ability of communicating our ideas for our mutual benefit and improvement. Without this requisite all our labor is vain.

A Dictionary of two languages cannot be perfect unless it contain an exact and rigorous translation of the words, unencumbered by useless definitions. The most common idioms and phrases that are current in good society should also be incorporated, and even some of those which may be properly classed as vulgar, when they serve to elucidate the peculiar customs and usages of a country. To these should be added the corresponding signification of words in the mercantile vocabulary, as well as of the terms in most frequent use in the arts and sciences.

These latter classes of words are extremely various, particularly in those new republics of America which were formerly Spanish possessions. Many words are there in use which are not known in the Peninsula. For example: the TURKEY, which in Spain is known as el pavo or pavito, in Mexico is called el guajolote, in Cuba el guanajo—a word which is also there used figuratively, in allusion to the qualities of this fowl, to denote a stupid or half-witted person—and in some parts of South America it is termed el chumpipe or chinquique. The SWEET POTATO is called in Spain la patata dulce; in Mexico, el camote; in Cuba, el boniato, buniato, or moniato. A TWIN, in Europe, is gemelo or mellizo; but in Cuba it is jimagua; in some parts of South America, morrocho; and in Mexico, familiarly, cuate. In allusion to this latter term it is often said, Eso no tiene cuate, instead of Eso no tiene igual.

In this manner we might arrange alphabetically a large catalogue of words and idioms which ought to be known to the traveller, or to any one in communication with the countries we have named; since, for ordinary intercourse, familiar words and phrases are of greater utility than more classical expressions.

The Castilian language in America has undergone various alterations in the acceptations of words, as well as by the addition of many terms which the Academicians have not thought proper to insert, but which were well worthy of a place in their Dictionary. This deficiency has been in some measure supplied by the indefatigable SALVÁ. It is to be regretted, however, that the patriotic literary designs of this erudite Spaniard had not been sometimes seconded by persons of greater intelligence, since they have often given him erroneous definitions and descriptions.

In preparing the present work, besides the Dictionaries of BARETTI, NEUMAN, CONNELLY, and particularly that of Dr. DON MATEO SEOANE, the Editor has consulted the last edition of the Diccionario de la Academia Española, as well as the Dictionaries of SALVÁ and TERREROS; the treatise on Etimologias Castellanas by CABRERA, and on las Voces Cubanas by PICHARDO. In the English part he has taken for his guides the well-known Dictionaries of WEBSTER and WORCESTER, and in some cases the treatise on Americanisms by BARTLETT. "La Guia Mercantil de Madrid" has supplied him with the names of many articles of commerce, to which he has added a long catalogue, obtained by careful examination of the "Price-currents" of Cadiz, Vera Cruz, Havana, and New Orleans, besides an excellent collection generously furnished him by his esteemed friend, ALEXANDER J. COTHEAL, Esq., a merchant of this city well known for his extensive erudition, particularly in languages. He ought also to make mention of Mr. JOHN L. JEWETT, who, besides correcting many of the articles, and furnishing various additions, has carefully revised the whole work.

The last revised and enlarged edition of the Dictionary of DON MATEO SEOANE has been made the basis of the present work. For the orthography and prosody of SEOANE, however, which are now almost entirely disused, the Editor has substituted the new and improved orthography and prosody of the last edition of the Dictionary of the Academy. He has also added to SEOANE'S work more than EIGHT THOUSAND articles, including words, idioms, and proverbs. Many of the definitions of SEOANE he could not do less than retrench, especially in cases like the following: BEBER, To drink, to swallow any liquid.

He certainly could not imagine that any person speaking the English language, and wishing to consult a Spanish and English Dictionary, could need a definition in his own language of the simple verb to drink. He has also corrected many of SEOANE's definitions, as in the following examples: FROCK-COAT, Especie de casaca muy ajustada al cuerpo, instead of Levita. CROSS-LEGGED, El que tiene las piernas cruzadas, instead of Patizambo. KEG, Barrica, especie de tonel, instead of cuñete or barrilito. PURLOINER, Ladron que hurta á escondidas, instead of ratero. SOUNDING-BOARD, Sombrero de púlpito, instead of tornavoz. SPAN, Palmo, la distancia que hay desde el dedo "pólice," instead of "el pulgar." There are also a great number of verbs, adjectives, and substantives in SEOANE's work, which, instead of being accurately rendered by equivalents, are obscurely and often erroneously defined by periphrasis. The following examples must suffice: To IMPRECATE, Maldecir, instead of Imprecar. HENPECKED, El que está gobernado por su mujer, instead of Gurrumino. INSERVICEABLE, Lo que no sirve para nada, instead of Inservible, &c., &c.

The Editor does not flatter himself that his own work is perfect; but, at the same time, he feels at liberty to assert, that in many important respects it is greatly superior to its predecessors. It contains, in both languages, the exact equivalents and correspondents of the words in general use, both in their literal and metaphorical acceptations. The technical terms most frequently used in the arts, and in chemistry, botany, medicine, and natural history, as well as nautical and mercantile terms and phrases,—the greater part of which, as may be seen by comparison, are not contained in other Dictionaries,—have been carefully selected and arranged in the present work. It also contains many Spanish words used only in those countries of America which were formerly dependencies of Spain. The irregularities of the verbs, in Spanish and English, are here, for the first time, given in full, in their alphabetical order; and, in addition to this, the work also contains a grammatical synopsis of both languages, arranged for ready and convenient reference.

The pronunciation of the Castilian language is so clearly set forth in this Dictionary, as to render it well-nigh impossible for any person who can read English readily, to fail of obtaining the true sounds of the Spanish words at sight.

Particular attention is invited to the Phonetic Alphabet used in the English-Spanish Part, for conveying the true pronunciation of English words. The Editor respectfully asks of all who, with himself, acknowledge the Castilian as their mother-tongue, that before condemning in advance this new and perfect method of expressing the sounds of the letters in the English alphabet, they will carefully read the "INTRODUCCION" to the Second Part of this work. He is well assured that by so doing they will, with moderate effort, find themselves able, in a very short time, to conquer all the manifold difficulties of English pronunciation; and by obtaining the assistance of an American or an Englishman, to read to them carefully once or twice the examples attached to the "KEY" in the "Introduccion," they cannot fail to obtain readily a knowledge of the true sounds of the Phonetic Alphabet.

The constantly increasing intercourse between those countries where the English and Spanish languages are respectively spoken; the friendly relations that exist, and which it is so desirable may continue to exist, between the governments and people of those countries; the proximity in this Western hemisphere of two great people speaking these noble languages; the incessant migration and immigration which are daily bringing them face to face in all the relations of political, commercial, and social life, and the cheering promise which science holds out, in the wonderful achievements of steam and magnetism, of still greater and more frequent intercourse among civilized nations,—these are facts which may suggest a field of extended usefulness even to the humble compiler of a Dictionary. It has accordingly been the aim and constant desire of the Editor to lay a foundation for mutual esteem and respect, and strengthen the bonds of an enduring intercourse between the people of his own and his adopted country, by furnishing to each the means of becoming better acquainted with that great exponent of a nation's interior life which is found in its permanent literature. The hope, on the one hand, that his labors might lead the descendants of the Anglo-Saxon race to a more intimate knowledge and appreciation of the immortal works of Cervantes and his worthy compeers, as they exist in pure Castilian and, on the other, that they might also be instrumental in giving to the Spanish mind a renewed and quickened desire to become more intimately acquainted with the rich and varied stores of English and American literature and science—this hope has been sufficient to convert what would otherwise have been intolerable drudgery into a useful and ennobling occupation.

As the Editor has been guided in his labors, for the most part, by his own limited attainments, he has reason to fear, in a work composed of so great a variety of articles upon so extensive a diversity of matters, that he has not always succeeded in avoiding errors. Should such be found, he has no desire that they should be concealed, but will feel thankful rather to all who may assist him to correct them, for the benefit of the public, whose true interests, and no other motive, have compelled him to undertake his laborious and unappreciated task.

Quid est suavius quam bene rem gerere bono publico?—PLATO.

NEW-YORK, March, 1852.

A SYNOPSIS

OF THE

SPANISH OR CASTILIAN LANGUAGE.

THE PARTS OF SPEECH are: the Article, the Noun (substantive and adjective), the Pronoun, the Verb, the Participle, the Adverb, the Preposition, the Conjunction, and the Interjection.

THE DEFINITE ARTICLE.

Masculine, sing. The, El: pl. The, Los.
Feminine, " " La: " " Las.

When the article el comes after de (of or from), or á (to), the e is suppressed and they are thus written; of the, del, to the, al, instead of de el, á el. No apostrophe ' is used in Spanish.

1. Agua, water; águila, eagle, &c., though feminine, take the masculine article; but only in the singular, and when they are immediately preceded by it. —Ollendorff, pp. 235, 460.

2. Common nouns taken in a general sense in English, require the definite article in Spanish: as, Man is mortal, El hombre es mortal. Charity is the first of virtues, La caridad es la primera de las virtudes. But when the sense is indeterminate, they do not admit it: as, Give him bread, Dale pan.

3. Before nouns of measure, weight, or number, the English indefinite article is rendered into Spanish by the definite, and frequently omitted; as, He paid six dollars a barrel, El pagó á cinco pesos el barril, or cinco pesos barril.

4. The English definite and indefinite articles before ordinal numbers preceded by proper names, nouns in apposition, national nouns, as well as those signifying dignity, profession, trade, &c., of persons, and in exclamations, are omitted in Spanish: as, Charles the Fifth, Carlos quinto; Madrid the capital of Spain, Madrid capital de España; He is an American, El es Americano; She is a milliner, Ella es modista; What a pity! ¡ Que lástima!—Ollendorff, p. 462.

THE INDEFINITE ARTICLE.

Masculine, sing. A or an, Un. Feminine, sing. A or an, Una. The plural unos (masculine), and unas (feminine), are translated into English by the pronoun some: as, a man, un hombre; some men, unos hombres.

5. The English indefinite article coming between an adjective or a pronoun and a noun, generally is not translated; but when it is emphatical it is placed before the adjective; as, So beautiful a woman, Tan hermosa mujer, or Una mujer tan hermosa. Such a man, Tal hombre, or Un tal hombre.

THE NOUN SUBSTANTIVE.

Spanish Nouns have Gender, Number, and Case.

GENDER.

It is masculine or feminine. Every he, or male animal, is of the masculine gender; every she or female is of the feminine. For the particular manner to be observed about the gender of some nouns, see Ollendorff, p. 421.

6. The names of inanimate objects, or of things ending in a, ad, ion (bre, when it signifies quality), are for the most part feminine; and those terminating in e, i, o, or u, are generally masculine. For the exceptions see Ollendorff, p. 423.

7. Common nouns ending in o, change o into a to form the feminine; as, son, hijo, daughter, hija. Those terminating in an, on, or or, add a for the feminine; as, a man loiterer, un holgazan; a woman loiterer, una holgazana; patron, patron; patroness, patrona; shepherd, pastor; shepherdess, pastora.

8. There are some nouns that express the difference of gender by a different word or termination; as, father, padre; mother, madre; poet, poeta; poetess, poetisa.—Ollendorff, pages 246, 247.

NUMBER.

Singular and Plural.

9. Nouns ending in a short, or unaccented vowel, form the plural by adding s to the singular; as, boy, muchacho; boys, muchachos.

10. Nouns terminating in a long, or accented vowel, or in any consonant, or in y, add es to form the plural; as, ruby, rubí; rubies, rubies; captain, capitan; captains, capitanes; ox, buey; oxen, bueyes. Nouns terminating in z, change it into c, or retain it, and add es; as, judge, juez; judges, jueces, or juezes. The first is most commonly used. Papá, mamá, café, &c., are exceptions.—Ollendorff, p. 420. Consult the same page for the nouns used only in the singular, or in the plural termination.

CASE.

11. The Nominative case expresses the subject of the verb; as, The man gives, El hombre da.

12. The Objective case direct points out the immediate object of the action of the verb; as, The man gives alms, El hombre da limosna.

13. The Objective case indirect, or complement, indicates the term, or end of the action expressed by the verb; as, The man gives alms to the poor, El hombre da limosna á los pobres.

14. When the object direct of an active transitive verb is a person, a proper or personified noun, it must be preceded by the preposition á; as, A man must love man, El hombre debe amar al hombre; Isabella conquered Granada, Isabel conquistó á Granada; The miser loves no other God but his money, El avaro no ama otro Dios que á su dinero.

Augmentative and Diminutive Nouns.

15. Augmentative nouns are those that increase the extent of their signification by adding on, ote, or azo to the masculine nouns, and ona, ota, or aza to the feminine, suppressing their final letter, should it be a, e, or o; as, (a boy), "un muchacho," "un muchachon" (a big boy); "una muchacha" (a girl), "una muchachona" (a big girl).

16. The termination azo frequently signifies the blow or injury caused by the object to which it is added; as, látigo (whip), un latigazo (a very large whip; a stroke with a whip).

17. Diminutive nouns are formed by adding ito, illo, ico, or uelo for the masculine, and ita, illa, ica, or uela for the feminine, suppressing the final letter if it be a, o, or e; as, "un muchacho" (a boy), un muchachito, muchachillo, or muchachuelo (a little boy); "una muchacha" (a girl), una muchachita, muchachilla, or muchachuela (a little girl).

18. The terminations ito, ita, &c., added to Christian names, or those that express relationship, indicate love, affection, and regard towards the object; thus, "hermanita" (dear sister); "Juanito" (esteemed John), &c.

THE NOUN ADJECTIVE.

19. In Spanish the Adjective must agree with its noun, in Gender and Number; as, "un hombre rico" (a rich man), "una mujer rica" (a rich woman); "hombres ricos" (rich men), "mujeres ricas" (rich women).

Gender of Adjectives.

20. Adjectives ending in o are masculine, and change it into a to form the feminine; as, rico, rica (rich). Adjectives ending in on or an add a for the feminine; as, griton, gritona (clamorous); haragan, haragana (idle). Those ending in any other letter are common to both genders; as, "un hombre prudente" (a prudent man), "una mujer prudente" (a prudent woman).

Exception.—Adjectives ending in a consonant, and derived from the names of countries, add a to form their feminine; as, Español, Española (Spanish); Ingles, Inglesa (English); Andaluz, Andaluza (Andalusian).

Number.

21. Adjectives form their plural according to the rules set forth for nouns; as, blanco, blancos (white); turquí, turquíes (deep blue); natural, naturales (natural); feliz, felices (happy).

Degrees of Signification.

Adjectives have three degrees of signification, the positive, the comparative, and the superlative.

Comparatives.

Comparatives may be considered under the three divisions of the comparative of equality, the comparative of superiority, and the comparative of inferiority.

The comparative of equality with adjectives is formed with tan .... como (as, so .... as): as, "El es tan rico como ella" (He is as rich as she); "Ella no es tan hermosa como su hermana" (She is not so handsome as her sister).

The comparative of equality with nouns is formed with tanto, tanta .... como (as much, so much .... as); tantos, tantas .... como (as many, so many .... as): as, "Ella tiene tanto dinero como él" (She has as much money as he); "El tiene tantas casas como su hermano" (He has as many houses as his brother).

In the comparative of equality with verbs, cuanto is sometimes substituted for como: as, "Tanto leo cuanto escribo" (I read as much as I write).

The comparative of superiority with adjectives is formed with mas .... que (more, or the termination er .... than); as, "El es mas rico que ella" (He is richer than she); "El honor es mas precioso que las riquezas" (Honor is more precious than riches).

Before nouns of number, more than is rendered by mas de; as, "Ellos gastáron mas de quinientos pesos" (They spent more than five hundred dollars). But if the phrase be negative, mas que is used; as, "No tengo mas que dos libras" (I have no more than two pounds).

The more .... the more, with an intervening verb, is rendered by cuanto mas .... mas, or cuanto mas .... tanto mas; as, "Cuanto mas estudia, tanto mas aprende" (The more he studies, the more he learns).

The comparative of inferiority is formed with ménos .... que (less .... than); as, "La plata es ménos útil que el hierro" (Silver is less useful than iron).

Before nouns of number, less than is translated by ménos de; as, "Necesito ménos de tres reales" (I need less than three shillings).

The less .... the less, with an intervening verb, is rendered by cuanto ménos .... tanto ménos; as, "Cuanto ménos trabaja, tanto ménos gana" (The less he works, the less he gains).

Superlatives.

English superlatives ending in est, or formed by most, are rendered by prefixing the definite article to the Spanish comparative; as, "El mas sabio" (the wisest); "la mas ingrata" (the most ungrateful).

Superlatives in English with very are formed in Spanish by prefixing muy to the adjective, or by affixing to it the termination ísimo; as, "Muy hábil or habilísimo" (very skilful); "muy fácil or facilísimo" (very easy).

Irregular Comparatives and Superlatives.

Pos.	Comp.	Super.
Bueno,	mejor,	óptimo.
Malo,	peor,	pésimo.
Grande,	mayor,	máximo.
Pequeño,	menor,	mínimo.
Alto,	superior,	supremo.
Bajo,	inferior,	ínfimo.
Mucho,	mas.
Poco,	ménos.

PRONOUNS.

Personal Pronouns.

I, yo.	We, nosotros, nosotras.
Me, me.	Us, nos, nos.
Me, mí.	Us, nosotros, nosotras.
With me, conmigo.	With us, con nosotros, as.
Thou, tú.	You, vosotros, vosotras.
Thee, te.	You, os, os.
Thee, tí.	You, vosotros, vosotras.
With thee, contigo.	With you, con vosotros, as.

You, in familiar polite style, is translated usted for both genders, and the verb agrees with it in the singular or plural, according to the sense. Usted and its plural are always written in abbreviation, thus: V. or Vm. for the first, and VV. or Vms. for the latter.

You, usted, (V.)	You, ustedes, (VV.)
You, á usted, le la, se.	You, á VV. los, las, se.
You, á V. le, se; á él, ella, sí.	You, á VV. les, se; á ellos, ellas, sí.
With you, con V. or consigo.	With you, con VV. or consigo.
He or it, él.	They, ellos.
Him or it, le, se; él, sí.	Them, los, se; ellos, sí.
Him or it, le, se; él, sí.	Them, les, se; ellos, sí.
With him, it, con él, consigo.	With them, con ellos, consigo
She or it, ella.	They, ellas.
Her or it, la, se; ella, sí.	Them, las, se; ellas, sí.
Her or it, le, se; ella, sí.	Them, les, se; ellas, sí.
With her, it, con ella, consigo.	With them, con ellas, consigo

Mí, tí, sí, are always preceded by prepositions.

Me, te, se, le, los, la, las, les, are governed by verbs and never placed after prepositions.

Possessive Pronouns Conjunctive.

My, mi, mis.	His, su, sus.	Its, su, sus.
Thy, tu, tus.	Her, su, sus.	Their, su, sus.
Your, with reference to Usted or Ustedes, su, sus.

These pronouns agree in number with the noun that follows them; as, He sold his horses (él vendió sus caballos); they fulfilled their promise (ellos cumplieron su promesa).

Possessive Pronouns Absolute.

Mine, mio, mios. mia, mias.	His, suyo, suyos. suya, suyas.	Its, suyo, suyos. suya, suyas.
Thine, tuyo, tuyos. tuya, tuyas.	Hers, suyo, suyos. suya, suyas.	Theirs, suyo, suyos. suya, suyas.

Our, nuestro, nuestros. Your, vuestro, vuestros. Your, de Usted. nuestra, nuestras. vuestra, vuestras. de Ustedes.
Your, with reference to Usted, is also translated suyo, suyos, suya, suyas, or su, sus . . . de V. or VV.

Relative and Interrogative Pronouns.

Passive Verbs.

Passive verbs are formed from active transitive verbs by adding their participle past to the auxiliary verb ser (to be), through all its changes, as in English; thus, from the active verb amar (to love), is formed the passive verb ser amado (to be loved).

The participle must agree in gender and number with the nominative it refers to; thus, He is loved (el es amado); she is loved (ella es amada); they are loved (ellos son amados).

Pronominal or Reflective Verbs.

A pronominal or reflective verb is conjugated by prefixing the pronouns me, te, se, V. se; nos, os, se, VV. se to the verb according to its person and number; as, he arms himself, él se arma.

In the infinitive and imperative moods the pronouns are placed after the verb, and in one word with it; the pronoun, therefore, must be suppressed, in order to find out the conjugation: thus, To approach, acercarse, (se) acercar, first conjugation.

Remarks on the Use of the Subjunctive Mood.

Three are the terminations of the imperfect tense subjunctive mood; ra, ría, se.—The termination ra, or se, is used when the verb is governed by a conditional conjunction, and the verb that completes the sense of the phrase is placed in the termination ria; If he had money, he would buy the house, Si él tuviera dinero, compraria la casa:—if the verb begins without a conditional conjunction, the termination ra or ría may be used, placing the verb that completes the sense in the termination se; as, It would be proper that you should write to him, Fuera or sería bueno que V. le escribiese.

Verbs signifying command, wish, supplication, &c., being in the present indicative, require the governed verb in the present subjunctive; and if they be in any of the past tenses of the indicative, the governed verb must be in the termination ra or se, of the subjunctive.—See Ollendorff, p. 352, 56, 64, 68, 481.

The Gerund.

The gerund is that part of the verb that terminates in ando in verbs of the first conjugation, and in iendo in those of the second and third; as, publicando (publishing), from publicar; prometiendo (promising), from prometer; asistiendo (assisting), from asistir. It admits no change for gender or number.

It is translated by the English present participle, and conjugated with the verb estar (to be); as, Anastasia is reading, and Maria Ann is playing on the piano (Anastasia está leyendo, y María Ana está tocando el piano).

PARTICIPLE.

The passive or past participle terminates in ado in he first conjugation, and in ido in the second and third. It changes its termination according to the number and gender of the person it refers to; except when it follows immediately after the verb haber, in which case it does not admit of any change.

All passive participles that do not terminate in ado or ido are called irregular; such are the following, from the verbs—

To open, abrir, abierto.	To print, imprimir, impreso
To cover, cubrir, cubierto.	To die, morir, muerto.
To say, decir, dicho.	To solve, solver, suelto.
To write, escribir, escrito.	To see, ver, visto.
To fry, freir, frito.	To put, poner, puesto.
To do, hacer, hecho.	To turn, volver, vuelto.

Their compounds have the same irregularity.

Verbs that have two Participles.

There are some verbs that have two passive participles, the one regular and the other irregular. Such are:—To bless, bendecir, bendecido, bendito; to compel, compeler, compelido, compulso; to convert, convertir, convertido, converso; to awake, despertar, despertado, despierto; to elect, elegir, elegido, electo; to express, expresar, expresado, expreso; to fix, fijar, fijado, fijo; to satiate, hartar, hartado, harto; to include, incluir, incluido, incluso; to join, juntar, juntado, junto; to arrest, prender, prendido, preso; to provide, proveer, proveido, provisto; to break, romper, rompido, roto; to loosen, soltar, soltado, suelto; to suspend, suspender, suspendido, suspenso, &c.

The regular participles of these verbs are used to form the compound tenses with haber; as, He has awaked early (el ha dispertado temprano).

The irregular participles are used as verbal adjectives, and with the verbs ser, &c., and do not form compound tenses with haber; excepting preso, prescrito, provisto, roto, and a few others; as, He is early awaked (el está despierto temprano); They have provided (ellos han provisto or proveido.)

ADVERBS.

Adverbs are formed from adjectives of one termination by the addition of mente; as, dulce, dulce*mente*: and from those of two terminations, by adding mente to the feminine; as, gracioso, gracios*amente*. They admit the superlative; as, graciosísimamente.

When two or more adverbs ending in ly occur in the same sentence, the termination mente is added to the last only; as, He speaks elegantly and correctly (el habla correcta y elegantemente).

(For a collection of adverbs, see Ollendorff, p. 456.)

PREPOSITIONS.

The most frequent are—

At, to, for,	A.	Towards,	hácia.
Before,	ántes, ante.	Until,	hasta.
With,	con.	For, to,	para.
Against,	contra.	By, for, through,	por.
Of, from,	de.	According,	segun.
From,	desde.	Without,	sin.
In, on, at,	en.	On, upon,	sobre.
Between, among,	entre.	Behind,	tras, detras.

CONJUNCTIONS.

The principal conjunctions are

That,	que.	Since,	pues, pues que.
Also,	tambien.	By, for,	por.
Moreover,	ademas.	Therefore,	por tanto.
And,	y or i, é.	Whereas,	por cuanto.
Neither, nor,	ni.	That,	para que.
Or, either, Whether,	ó, ú, ya.	That, In order that,	para que. á fin de.
Whether,	sea que.	If,	si.
Neither,	tampoco.	But,	sino.
But,	mas, pero.	Provided,	con tal que.
Even,	aun cuando. aun, cuando.	Unless,	á ménos de. á ménos que.
Although, Though,	aunque.	Since,	pues, puesto que.
Because,	porque, que.	As,	como, así como
Why?	¿porqué?	So,	así.

E is used instead of y, when the following word begins by i or hi.—U is employed instead of ó, when the word immediately following begins by ó, or ho.

INTERJECTIONS.

Alas!	¡ Ay !	Take care!	¡ Tate !
Ah!	¡ Ah !	Hurrah!	¡ Viva !
Wo to me!	¡ Ay de mí !	Here!	¡ Ce !

Obs. The verbs gustar, to like; pesar, to be sorry for; acomodar, to suit; convenir, to comport, &c., are frequently used only in the third person singular or plural, as in the verb placer. Ex.: He likes music, le gusta la música, or él gusta de la música.

A LIST OF ALL THE IRREGULAR VERBS.

Obs. 1. The compound verbs are not inserted, when they have the same irregularity as the simple ones from which they are derived: as, componer, contraponer, &c., which are conjugated like poner.

Obs. 2. The most general irregularities of the Spanish verbs consist in their taking i, j, y, or ue, or i, instead of o, or e. To find the infinitive mood of such verbs, separate the regular termination, and omit the letter or letters that do not belong to the radicals of such verbs: as in comienzo, muestras, sintió, condujeron, trajéran, construyesen, the terminations are o, as, ió, eron, éran, esen. The remaining letters are, comienz, muestr, sint, conduj, traj, construy. Add to these the regular terminations of the infinitive mood, and they will read comienzar, muestrar, sintir, conducir, traer, construyir. Take off the i, j, and y, change the ue into o, and the i into e; add a c before the termination to those in ij or uj; and they will be comenzar, nostrar, sentir, conducir, traer, construir.

Obs. 3. The irregular participles are set in italics after their verbs.

☞ The verbs of the first column are conjugated like those of the second, which must be consulted in their respective places.

* Formerly it was said via, vias, via, viamos, viais, vian.

A KEY TO THE PRONUNCIATION AS REPRESENTED IN THIS DICTIONARY.

Spanish Alphabet.

Give to the vowel the sound that the syllable that follows it in italics has in English; and sound also, as in English, each of the syllables that represent said sound throughout all the dictionary.

Vowels.

Pronounce a, ah; e, ay; i, ee; o, oh; u, u (in bull;) y, ee.

The vowels have invariably the same sound, and must be fully and distinctly pronounced. The u is silent in the syllables gue, gui, que, qui, which are pronounced gay, gee, kay, kee: when the u is to be sounded, it is marked thus, ü, as in argüir (ar-goo-ir).

Consonants.

b, bay,	f, ai'fay,	l, ai'lay,	ñ, ai'nyay,	s, es'say,	y, griega or ye, ya,
c, thay,	g, hay,	ll, ai'lyay,	p, pay,	t, tay,	z, thai'dah.
ch, tchay,	h, ah'tchay,	m, ai'may,	q, coo,	v, vay,
d, day,	j, hoe'tah,	n, ai'nay,	r, er'ay, er'-ray,	x, ay'kiss,

N. B. The th is to be always pronounced lisped as in thin, path; the h very harshly aspirated, and the z like ce.—See Ollendorff's Method for learning the Spanish Language, page 404.

DICCIONARIO NUEVO

DE LAS

LENGUAS ESPAÑOLA É INGLESA

ESPAÑOL É INGLES—SPANISH AND ENGLISH.

A, ah, In the Spanish language, has but one sound, and is pronounced as the open English a in alarm.

A', prep. which signifies to, in, at, according to, on, by, for, and of; as Voy á Madrid, I am going to Madrid. A' la Inglesa, In the English fashion. A' oriente, In the east. Jugar á los naipes, To play at cards. A' las ocho, At eight o'clock. A' ley de Castilla, According to the law of Castile. Vino á pie, He came on foot. Quien á hierro mata, á hierro muere, He who kills by the sword, dies by the sword. Dos á dos, Two by two. A' como vale la fanega? á treinta reales, For how much a bushel? for thirty reals. Este vaso huele á vino, This glass smells of wine. Real de á ocho, Piece of eight. V. REAL.—A' coalesces with the masculine article el, and instead of á el, as anciently used, al is now written, as Al rey, To the king. Al papa, To the pope. This masculine article is also used before the infinitive mood of verbs taken substantively, as Al amanecer, At the break of day. Al ir yo allá, When I was going there. —A' is equivalent to the limit or end of any place or time. A' la cosecha pagaré, I shall pay at harvest-time. Desde aquí á S. Juan, From this to St. John's day. Me llegaba el agua á la garganta, The water was up to my throat.—A' sometimes signifies the motive or principle, as A' instancia de la ciudad, At the request of the city. A' qué propósito? To what purpose? —It also serves to express distributive numbers, as A' perdiz por barba, A partridge a head.—Before the infinitive mood, and at the beginning of a sentence, it has sometimes a conditional sense, as A' decir verdad, If we must speak the truth.—This preposition governs almost all parts of speech, whether substantives, adjectives, pronouns, or verbs: A' los hombres, To men. De bueno á malo, From good to bad. A' mí, á ti, á vosotros, To me, to thee, to you. A' jugar, To play. Vamos á pasear, Let us take a walk.—It points out the person in whom the action of the verb terminates, and then is placed before the accusative or objective case, as Amo á Pedro, I love Peter.—A' is still used in some phrases instead of por, en, sin, para, and la; and in obsolete writings for con and de. —In composition it serves to convert substantives and adjectives into verbs, as abocar from boca, ablandar from blando. Formerly it was prefixed to many words, as abajar, amatar, &c.; but being redundant, these words are now written bajar, matar, &c.—A' is frequently used adverbially, as A' deshora, Unseasonably. A' diferencia de esto, Contrary to this. A' consecuencia de eso, In consequence of that. A' la verdad, Truly. A' lo ménos, At least. A' sabiendas, Knowingly. A' veces, Sometimes. A' ojos vistas, Plainly, publicly; barefacedly. A' cuestas, On the back, on the shoulders. A' escondidas, Privately, in a secret manner. A' prueba de bomba, Bomb-proof.—A' denotes the number, price, rate, manner of action, instrument, height, depth, &c., as El gasto sube á cien pesos, The expense amounts to a hundred dollars. Se hizo el seguro á tres por ciento, The insurance was effected at three per cent. El azúcar se vende á tres pesos quintal, or el, or por quintal, Sugar is sold at three dollars a hundred. El se viste á la Española, He dresses after the Spanish fashion. Pasaron el rio con el agua á la cintura. They crossed the river with the water up to the waist. No le llega el vestido á la rodilla, His dress does not reach to his knees. A' fe de hombre de bien, On the faith of an honest man.

C.

C, Thay, Is the third letter of the alphabet, and before e and i has generally the sound of the English th in thick; before a, o, u, l, and r, it sounds like k. It is also a numeral, as, C. 100; Ↄ. 500; and CIↃ. 1000.—The Spanish academicians consider ch as a distinct letter, double in figure but simple in value, and therefore place it after all the other words beginning with a c; but in this work it is retained in the place usual in English, for the reasons given in the preface. Ch has always the soft sound in Spanish, the same as in the English word church: formerly it was pronounced as k in words derived from Greek or Hebrew, but in such words the h is now omitted, or the orthography changed, as Cristo, formerly written Christo; Querubin, formerly written Chérubin, &c.
